As a young generation we are taking upon us more and more responsibility towards managing our career, building our nation and even looking after our families, often remotely. Internet services are an immense support in this process....book a ticket online, send an SMS meeting reminder, do a conference call, use online banking, even connect with friends for a party.....Why not digital medical information store and exchange.

Right from birth through adulthood, we go through a number of health interventions, starting with immunization.

Our medical history is vital when it comes to clinical care, medical emergencies and preventive health management. Health records enable doctors to take key decisions during diagnosis and treatment while speeding up the entire process. Many a times, be it diagnosis or prognosis, it is very difficult and sometimes even impossible for a medical professional to take critical decisions without having to review a patient's medical history.

Engage with your health data

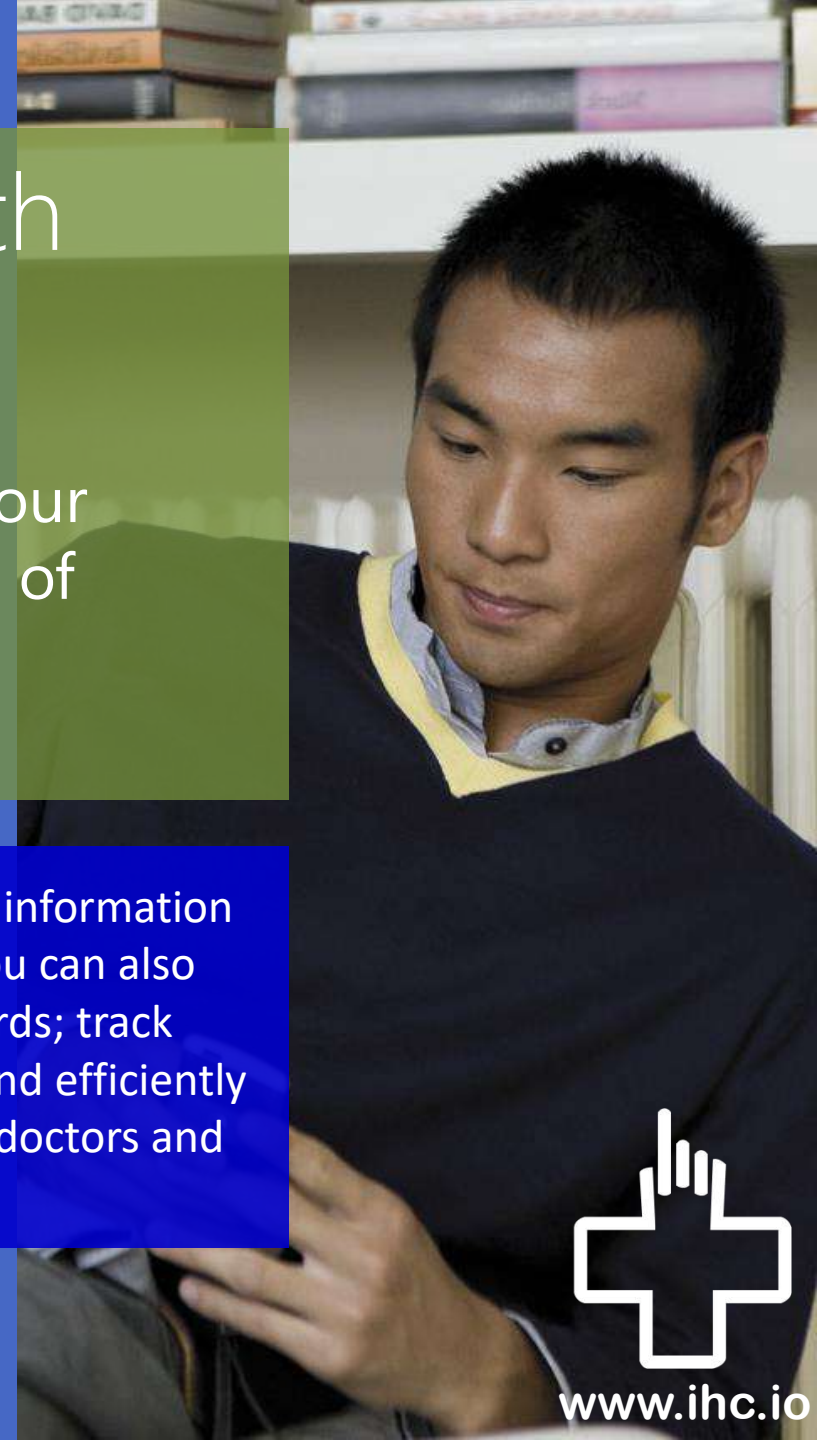

We see an average of 19 doctors in our lifetime—that's minimum 200 pages of medical records of various doctors.

Not only can you access and share important health information and take online consultation anytime, anywhere; you can also manage your personal and your family's health records; track crucial health information that changes over time; and efficiently and effectively communicate information with your doctors and other service providers.
